A Free workshop Featuring: DR. STEWART DARBY, PhD

EAU CLAIRE FAMILY PRACTICE

The human prostate is essential in human reproduction. It consists of different cell types that have complex interactions. Testosterone and related male hormones have a major role in the growth and function of the prostate. The prostate combines these cellular elements into a beautiful design for efficient mixing of fluids to allow human reproduction. However, beyond the reproductive years, this same design contributes to several health problems of men as uncontrolled or poorly regulated cellular growth causes damage to vital bodily functions. To learn more and ask questions please register below. Participants will be scheduled for screening according to registration priority. "First to register = first to be screened, etc." DRE screen will be done AFTER the workshop.
